

ABSTRACT

The invention pertains to a healthcare information management system which enables a patient to take possession and control of his healthcare information provided by a plurality of generally unrelated healthcare practitioners and pharmacies, comprising a central database, a portable access device provided to each patient, and a computer system at 5 each health care practitioner and pharmacy. Methods are provided for improved electronic prescription preparation and fulfillment based on comprehensive medical information stored in the system.